In previous articles, we covered the subject of mass mind control for the purposes of molding the population. The primary function of mass mind control has become population control. Over population is replacing global warming as the market leading trope. Like global warming and the 'eco' bandwagon, over population is not based on anything even approximating good science.

Politics Society Technology Deception Media Social Engineering Societal Collapse Depopulation Agenda Corruption

The enthusiasm behind the #Depopulation agenda has it's roots in fear. However the ongoing delivery is not based on irrational emotions, but profit. Entrepreneurial activity has long since moved into the market of human lives as future revenue yielding resources. Those thinking long term find themselves competing with an ever increasing number of interested parties.

In the second world war the greatest threat to victory was perceived in terms of careless dissemination of intelligence. The 'Loose lips sink ships' slogan has become a ubiquitous expression despite the fact that there hasn't been a world war for over half a century. This is highly convenient for the clandestine community. Their methods and goals are so utterly incompatible with human society that they must always be suppressing any open communication of said goals or methods. In many ways their methods mirror those used by serial abusers. The behaviour of such miscreants often follows a pattern of enforcing secrecy. The message being 'This is our secret and you should never tell anyone or bad things will happen to you'. Anyone with any cognitive capability recognises this as being an insidious and exceedingly cruel methodology. It comes as no particular surprise that many of the individuals who make up the clandestine community have experienced this vile methodology first hand. In every conceivable instance, one would expect these people to be the first to denounce this methodology. Unfortunately most of them are trapped in a vicious repetitive abuse cycle. The cult mentality of the clandestine community only exists as a result of this repetitive cycle. Consequently instead of being the destroyers of that which sought to destroy them, they are eternally engaged with perpetuating it.

Over time, the strategy has evolved to take into account future events. Seeking to control a group of people today may produce viable results. However if this control method is not maintained, future generations will reject it as representing an obsolete philosophy. To this end we now see a phenomenon which can be perceived in very specific terms:

- Those who are capable of understanding a complex and elaborate system of control represent both value and threat.
    - Value: Those who will keep the secrets of the control method(s) are perceived as representing the next influx of foot-soldiers that will apply the method(s).
    - Threat: Those who are compelled to broadcast their understanding of said control method(s) represent a credible threat to the perpetuation of the method(s).
- If they are technologically aware, conscientious and resistant to external influence then they are perceived by the clandestine community to be potentially of significance. If nothing else the perception of their significance can be used to kick the can down the road for a while longer.

There is a profoundly concerning strategy being deployed which specifically seeks to compromise male tech workers who display the characteristics mentioned previously. The evidence is demonstrable in terms of profile and chronology and is in fact, quite overwhelming. A simple analysis of the demographic reveals a consistent pattern being deployed by forces operating within a supra-national and inter-generational context.

When the Knights Templar made their discovery in the Holy Land, they were for the most part a guild of mercenaries. After their stellar rise to superpower status, things changed somewhat. Their Essenic traditions of chastity gradually mutated into a mindset of homo-eroticism and the occult. This was reinforced by way of freeing them from the historically powerful weapon of compromise via heterosexual relations. Ironically the homo-eroticism and occultism were the first accusations used by the French monarchy and the Vatican to force them underground. It would be naive to accept the mainstream narrative which asserts that post excommunication, they all disappeared and that was the end of that. Clearly it wasn't and today we still see major evidence of both their goals and their methods. In addition another source of highly aggressive mind control has emerged. One which has it's eyes fixed firmly on the future according to plans which span several decades. While broadly discounted as a conspiracy theory, the Kalergi plan is clearly being rolled out by the aforementioned interest groups. Ignoring the evidence does not detract from this increasingly apparent reality.

With the rise of the digital economy, a specific category of individual has become the target for an aggressive mind control program. Among tech workers there exists a demographic of demonstrably intelligent people who have spent decades using structured thinking to comprehend complex systems. The vast majority of these people are male, in addition a conspicuous number of them are over six feet tall. As has been mentioned in previous articles, men are more compelled by doing the right thing and women are more compelled by ensuring that everyone gets along well. As for the 'diversity' community, it would not be unreasonable to assume that they would be most likely to reflect the female mentality. In terms of the technologically aware population, the number of women inhabiting the industry is negligible. As such, apart from a few isolated individuals, there appears to be no tangible agenda in terms of displacing female tech workers. Quite the opposite is true in many markets. Affirmative action is frequently implemented to attract women into technology based roles. IT Men have long since learned to appreciate the benefits of having women in the office. The creative sector reflects a healthy number of women in front-end technology roles but very few in information architecture.

Many economists have pointed to a future which features the Chinese as being a dominant global superpower. The Chinese government is quite open about their fifty year plans and many other countries perceive this as highly effective in comparison to their own three to five year plans.The Chinese mindset is radically different from that of Western Nations and mind control represents a major weapon in the Chinese governments efforts to control their population. Somebody somewhere realised that technically capable men who are not easily influenced represent a highly credible threat to the success of mass mind control. As such they have been targeted by an aggressive mind control method most likely being deployed from within certain groups in the clandestine community. Given the long term nature of the method it is not unreasonable to perceive a connection with the long term goals of these control groups. This includes both unacknowledged social policy being implemented by forces within Britain and the fifty year plans of the Chinese government. This would be conspicuous enough if it was limited to the nations of the Far East. However the past two decades have seen China launch an economic assault on the USA and the rest of the consumer markets of planet Earth.

The aggressive mind controlling of tall Western technologists has also been distributed to Western nations by way of targeting them for the purposes of compromise and resulting control. This sounds extreme and in fact it quite clearly is. However it only illuminates the fact that what is actually occurring here is an economic symptom of fundamental extremism. As TEFLONRABBIT has stated previously, extremism is a large enough problem for humanity as it is.

> When the goals of extremists converge, there exists profound danger for the human race.

Analysing any cross section of developers or IT engineers will throw up a pattern which illustrates that many of these men are either in relationships with Asian women or have been in one at some point. While this is easily written off as mere coincidence stemming from urban demographics, there is evidence to indicate that there may be considerably more going on than meets the eye. Often these relationships extend into marriage and having children. Invariably they collapse at some point with a not insubstantial degree of acrimony. This has been occurring in Britain over the past two decades at least. It would not be a major leap to surmise that it has also been happening in other English speaking markets for just as long. The continuing application of this method indicates a possible connection with long term plans being rolled out by the Chinese government. It also ties in with the general acknowledgement that Chinese social control methods are extremely aggressive in comparison to methods such as 'nudge theory' employed in the West.

Among these divorced and separated Western male technologists, exists a demonstrable number of men who have re-identified themselves as being part of the 'diversity' community. It is impossible to ignore the inelegant truth that these men have been targeted and mind controlled into becoming celibate, homosexual, trans-sexual or sexually dysphoric in whatever way possible. According to the deranged precepts of mind control, this makes for more easily controlled individuals. This (along with the French King throwing a debtors tantrum) explains the Knights Templar excommunication in 1307.

> At some point in the past few decades, the psycho sexual ideals of the Knights Templar / FreeMasons and the fifty year plans of the Chinese government have become intertwined.

As to what motivates this frankly bizarre phenomena, one only has to consider the mass psy-op known as Covid-19. The SARS-COV pandemics in China relied heavily on perception management to roll out their mass masking mandate. Anyone confident in their understanding of basic virology and epidemiology took one look at the Covid narrative, snorted with derision and turned over the channel to find less offensive content. Nonetheless, the UN, WHO, WEF and every single world government except Belarus doubled down on the utterly spurious narrative and went ahead with their totalitarian mandates. Simultaneously the distributed clandestine community targeted those individuals in society with a reputation for dismissing state sponsored rhetoric and forming their own opinions. In every conceivable way those who disagreed with a narrative so fantastic that a Pangolin or even a Bat could see through it, were labelled as 'anti vaxxers' and broadly considered to be radical dissenters. The attitude is / was comparable to the actions of the Taiwanese government in regards to suppressing dissent among their population. It's well understood in Taiwan that if you shoot your mouth off about the government while enjoying a latte at a roadside cafe, you can expect a Nissan Urvan to show up presently. The doors open, men in dark clothing emerge and you simply 'disappear'. Much the same could be said about the attitude in Morocco in regards to questioning the legitimacy of their ruling monarch. To summarise, the motivation behind the previously detailed social engineering phenomenon is simply totalitarianism.

Beyond the stereotypical quest for yet more micro managed population control, lurks a savage and speculative endeavour. In the Eastern European real estate market there exists a trope that goes along the lines of:

> You can always tell when there's going to be a boom-town property bubble when the Jews and the Chinese show up.

Admittedly many Eastern European nations have historically been accused of anti semitism. However there's no recorded history of Sinophobia from these nations. Consequently it would appear that prejudice is not the motivator behind the spread of this trope. Additionally the USA has experienced massive economic speculation by the Chinese and the consistent spying conducted by Israelis in the USA is well documented. It's quite apparent that targeting conscientious people who can comprehend elaborate systems has become a vertical market. It seems that there is a high return in the business of gang stalking, gas lighting and blackmailing conducted by speculators in the market of population control. Targeting individuals who are not easily influenced appears to be part of an early incursion into aggressive psychological methods of HR micro management. Mind controlling them into some form of sexual dysphoria appears to be the chosen vehicle with which to bend them to the will of the aforementioned economic insurgents. The fact that a substantial percentage of these men work in complex and elaborate information management roles speaks to the long term goals of this unlikely partnership.

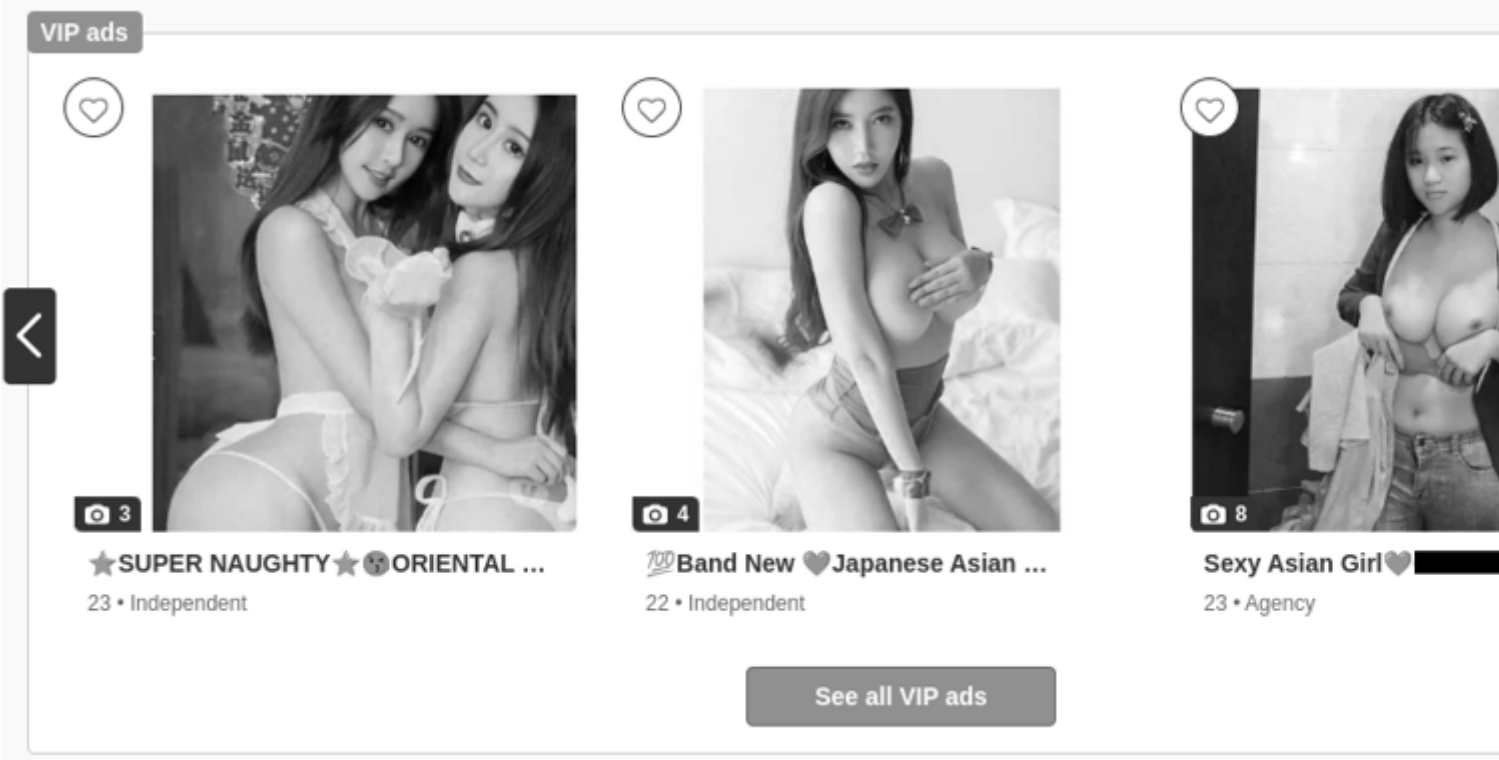

In the article Cruft, bloat and fecklessness we covered the retreat from edge case computing in education. The forecast of Britain becoming a highly influential digital nation was soundly sabotaged by the then Conservative government of Margaret Thatcher and latterly John Major. This appears to have also occurred in many other nations with the most notable decline in computer science uptake being witnessed in English speaking markets. Despite this profoundly damaging policy, many tall English speaking men decided of their own volition to educate themselves in contemporary software engineering. As a result, the 21st century saw Britain become a leading provider of high level digital delivery. The attempts by the government to prevent this happening appeared to have amounted to precisely nothing. Cue the conspicuous upturn in relationships between Caucasian men and Asian women.

The 2015 TV series 'MR ROBOT' was heavily influenced by (and is undoubtedly an integral part of) this 'Beast from the East' mind control program. The lead character Elliot is a maven extraordinaire who can essentially do as he pleases with technology. He is targeted by the 'Dark Army' which is a sinister clandestine group from China. They toy with him throughout the series and eventually force him to recognise his dissociative personality disorder. Along the way the global economy collapses, numerous people are killed, hacking is made to look sexy, drugs are consumed and betrayal features heavily throughout. In among the elaborate facets of a highly compelling script is the character 'White Rose'. This character is the leader of the Dark Army, the economic minister for China and also a closeted and ardent homosexual transvestite.It should be noted that neither the publishers 'Amazon Prime' or the script writers 'Anonymous' held anything back in terms of producing an uncomfortably familiar parallel between reality and fiction. As entertainment goes, it was a massive success. As far as representing viable predictive programming, the tie in with the 'Beast from the East' could not be more obvious.

Since the UK bowed to international pressure and relinquished control of the former colony of Hong Kong, there has been a steady influx of Hong Kong nationals who do not wish to remain under Chinese control. In addition, there has been a corresponding surge in the number of foreign nationals originating from other Far Eastern countries. The NHS has become massively dependent on nurses from the Philipines and several other industries have experienced a groundswell of Far Eastern hires. Notable among these industries is the sex industry. Browsing a prostitution services website, it is impossible to ignore the recent surge in services offered (in the UK) by women from China, Korea & Japan. This has actually been welcomed by many proponents of their services. Apparently their commitment to their work is far superior to that of their European counterparts. Obviously this is purely based on detached and analytical research by TEFLONRABBIT and absolutely no admissions will be made in regards to personal experiences.

It does not take the skills of Inspector Morse to estimate the motivators behind this conspicuous shift in sex worker demographics. Men who use the services of prostitutes are historically more easily compromised than those who do not. While this would generally be considered as a potential threat to the security and integrity of the realm, it also represents a serious fluctuation in economic terms. The money paid to domestic national sex workers would be likely to remain in the country and be spent in the British economy. Many of these women have families in Asia and frequently, money is sent back to these markets. It is not uncommon to find women from China in a range of jobs in the UK. They are often supporting children and other family members in their native country and as such represent a self sacrificing and truly noble cross section of society. However the question of security remains because the chances are that these foreign nationals will be under some form of surveillance by intelligence operatives from Britain, their country of origin and most notably - the Chinese government. Even if they are from other Asian countries, Beijing's Zhongguancun district has more than enough resources to be monitoring their presence in the UK.

Surveying this highly anomalous social engineering stunt, it becomes apparent that there is an incredibly sinister agenda in play. Somebody has decided that the catastrophes of ancient times presented great value for those who survived with their technology intact. The Viracocha are said to have arrived in South America on rafts of 'living eels'. The most likely explanation being that they were in fact rib craft. The only problem with this explanation is that it happened several millennia before rib craft were supposedly 'invented'. Antiquity is literally awash with evidence that a technologically sophisticated, breakaway civilisation has existed on Earth for many millennia. With the Georgia Guide-Stones clearly detailing a desire to return to the population density of these times, it seems that certain interest groups perceive themselves to be the next 'techno gods'. Since Venus stabilised in it's orbit, the next most credible source of potential catastrophe would be the Perseid Meteor shower. Fortunately it's current density distribution has spared Earth from massive bombardment in recent times. Lacking enough density during it's regular visits to our local solar system, we have been spared the cataclysm inducing impacts for several millennia at least. This was probably not always the case and in ancient times the bombardment of the Earth, Moon and Mars could well account for global catastrophes in deep antiquity. Furthermore the highly destructive asteroid bombardment could indeed account for a great deal of the craters visible on both the Moon and Mars.

Note: Contemporary thinking points to electrical discharges between planetary bodies accounting for the majority of the craters visible on Earth's nearest neighbours.

For those seeking to position themselves as 'techno gods' on a planet with a population of only half a billion, waiting for a natural catastrophe does not (as usual), represent the best value. It doesn't seem to be a coincidence that the past four years have featured a global pandemic which in every way imaginable appears to have been completely fabricated. It doesn't take much imagination to conceive of events that would run along similar lines but would kill off a much greater percentage of the global population. In times past, such catastrophes were followed by concerted efforts to repopulate the planet. With the ardently delivered campaign to gender proselytize men who would otherwise be considered as possessing leadership skills, re-population would be heavily biased in favour of less capable or conscientious progenitors. In terms of creating a race which is highly susceptible to information based control (blackmail & nudge theory) this would represent a feasible eugenics program.

While other nations focus on economic diversity, both Israel and China have made massive investments in technological industries. However due to economic and political factors they represent a less mature technological market. The groundbreaking maven forged in the 20th century such as David Braben, Sir Tim Berners Lee or even Steve Jobs were / are primarily from English speaking nations. They represent something akin to the 'vanguard' of IT consultation. However they also hail from capitalist democracies and do not represent a profile that would easily bend the knee to overt totalitarianism. In the eyes of speculative wannabe 'techno gods', men of this profile are essentially a massive problem. The nature of humanity is such that in the absence of inspirational governance, humans will opt for a cult of personality. Figures such as Richard Branson, Jeff Bezos and Elon Musk have recently fulfilled this sociological / economic figurehead role. The fact that their 'space tourism' trope has never delivered anything even remotely akin to a sustainable industry is conveniently ignored. Yet more public funds are diverted into indulging their facile 'space faring age' illusion while their infrastructure is co-opted for purposes which nobody actually needs.

Perhaps the most worrying factor is that the British government clearly know all about this disturbing agenda and are doing very little to counter this widespread shift in commercial economics. Instead they have been instrumental in attempting to subvert domestic technological innovation. The only conclusion that can be drawn is that the collective forces of the Palace of Westminster and their controllers at St Georges and Millbank, are 100% in complete 'Lockstep' with the One World Government agenda. An agenda which considers conscientious men who can understand complex systems to represent a credible threat to their goals. They appear to have been consistently working with other nations on an end-game which favours a massive global depopulation agenda and subjugates every single survivor.

Admittedly this manufactured and negotiated end times scenario is extrapolating a specific potential outcome and is in no way a gilt edged prediction. However if there's one thing we have learned from the many analyses conducted on the pages of TEFLONRABBIT, it's the following probability equation:

> It's so fucking insane that it's probably true

Perhaps one of the most complex systems known to exist is the covert method employed by the previously mentioned clandestine groups. They derive their technique of secrecy from a time when clear and concise communication between conscientious individuals posed a major threat to the goals of a breakaway civilisation. Languages were indeed confounded so that those unaware of the ciphers could not understand the shrouded significance of words used with hidden meaning. The succeeding generations that populate these clandestine groups are kept on point through the classic distract and delay methodology. The Holy Youtube Avengers insist that Jesus / Jahweh / whoever will return imminently. When taken to task on the time frame referenced, they unsurprisingly will not commit to any recognisable meter. It could be hours, months, decades or millennia but whatever it is, it's always soon.

This method is used by every deception based syndicate in the world. Organised criminal networks are regularly stripped of their leadership because they're doing some hard time in a super-max facility. While the 'Kappa' is behind bars, the network scales back it's operations. All the foot-soldiers and lieutenants go into a form of stasis until the boss gets liberated. This effectively neuters them for the duration of their leaders incarceration. The clandestine groups mentioned previously use the exact same method. Whether it's a forthcoming change in the incumbent political administration or whether it's disaster raining from the sky, there's always something big just over the horizon which everyone needs to be ready for. Once the event is underway and concluded, everyone will surely get what they have been so patiently waiting for. It's one of the oldest rackets in history. From Aztec magi to the Jonestown cult leader Jim Jones, interested parties have always benefited from delaying that which they have promised.

After all..... it's only two weeks to flatten the curve, right?
